The honor recognizes Ochoa's commitment to delivering reporting that bridges diverse perspectives and serves the Latino community. Known for her incisive coverage of U.S.

politics and its global implications, Ochoa has become a trusted voice in the media landscape, both domestically and internationally.

Reflecting on the recognition, Stephanie Ochoa shared, "This award is a powerful reminder of the vital role journalism plays in shaping our country and communities. For me, it represents a personal milestone as a Latina, an immigrant, and a professional in political reporting - an arena once out of reach for many in my community. The stories we share are essential for democracy and informed decision-making, and today, we also celebrate Entravision's commitment to this mission."

The award will be presented tonight at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C., during the AFPC-USA's annual awards ceremony. The evening will celebrate journalists from media outlets serving international audiences who have demonstrated exceptional dedication to their craft. Additionally, scholarships will be awarded, fostering the next generation of global media leaders.

“Stephanie’s dedication to delivering accurate and impactful reporting exemplifies the values Entravision upholds in connecting our audiences with stories that matter,” said Michael Christenson, CEO of Entravision. “We are immensely proud of her achievements and congratulate her on this well-deserved recognition.”

The Foreign Press Excellence Award underscores Ochoa's contribution to Entravision’s mission of providing premium content to key Latino markets and beyond, reinforcing its role as a leader in delivering critical, high-quality journalism to diverse communities.

Jeffery Liberman, President and COO of Entravision, added, “Stephanie’s recognition with the 2024 Foreign Press Excellence Award is well-deserved and reflects her exceptional dedication and skill as a journalist. Since joining Entravision, she has delivered outstanding reporting that connects national political issues to our local communities. We are proud to celebrate this remarkable achievement with her.”
