"Ryder is a true partner and integral part of our business," said Alexandra Villoch. "It's rare that two South Florida-based companies maintain such a solid, long-lasting partnership. Ryder's loyalty and dedication has been instrumental to our business success, and to serving our community."

In 1945, the Miami Herald — the largest newspaper in South Florida, serving Miami-Dade, Broward County, and Monroe County — turned to Ryder for a dedicated fleet and drivers capable of meeting its growing transportation needs. Over the past 70 years, Ryder has continued to adapt to the newspaper's changing needs. Today, Ryder operates 12 straight trucks, two tractor trailers, and one van for the newspaper. It also provides 38 drivers, who make deliveries from the newspaper's headquarters in Doral, north to Broward County, and south to Key West, seven days a week.

"The Miami Herald's 70-year-long partnership with Ryder is the greatest testament to the unparalleled service Ryder provides," said John Diez, President of Dedicated Transportation Solutions, Ryder. "It illustrates just how important our customer relationships are to us, and the tremendous value we place on making those relationships last. It has been a great pleasure to serve as the dedicated transportation solutions provider for such a prominent news source in the South Florida community, and we look forward to continuing to provide them with the excellence they've grown to rely on."
